Hello Hornet,

I hope you're all bracing through midterm season and taking care of yourselves as we head into the latter half of the semester. I'm excited to share a quick update on what I've been working on. Over the past few weeks, I've been focusing on researching and preparing for a few pieces of legislation that will be coming up in our next cycle so watch out for that. In addition, I've been fortunate to make progress on some of the strategic priorities we set earlier this year, work that I believe will continue moving the needle for students.

As we push toward finals, I want to remind everyone to pace yourselves and lean into the support of your teams. It's easy to overextend during this busy season, but making time to recharge and share the workload is just as important as getting things done. Together, we'll finish the semester strong.

In service,

Sergio Antonio Maciel Montoya

Strategic Priorities Updates:

As part of our next steps, we should look to meet with PEAK, the Carlsen Center, the CARCs, and student representatives to explore areas of collaboration that align with ASI's Strategic Priorities. These conversations will allow us to identify shared goals, pool resources, and expand opportunities for student engagement and support. Additionally, we can expand on the existing file case to review the underlying logic and framework of past initiatives, ensuring our approach is both data-informed and strategically consistent. This will not only strengthen partnerships but also provide a clear roadmap for how these collaborations can amplify student impact across multiple areas.
